OPINION OF AN EXPERT.

Mrs. Mary B. Welch, Teacher of Domestic Economy at State University of Iowa.

"My deliberate judgment is that the oven of the Range, as compared with others is not only more equally heated in every part—front as well as rear—but as a result of its superior ventilation the food placed therein is better cooked, while retaining a sweeter flavor, and a larger proportion of its best juices. I have found, also, that the consumption of fuel in this Range for a given amount of work, is much less than any other."

THE RICH TRAGEDY.

TRAGICAL SEQUEL TO A PECULIAR MARRIAGE AND SENSATIONAL KIDNAPING.

The Excitement at Cobleskill, N. Y.—Rich's Efforts to Borrow Money to Pursue His Wife—The Murderer's Marriage with Mrs. Trimble—His Early, Happy-go-Lucky Life—Mrs. Rich's Efforts to Secure Political Honors for Her Husband.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

COBLESKILL, N. Y., March 2.—This town has been shaken from center to circumference all day, and never before did the New York papers have so large a sale, owing to the horrible Rich tragedy at St. Paul, Minn. People discussing the tragedy have been seen in all directions, and the late Mr. Rich has been condemned for not ending the existence of Gale before taking his own. Since the elopement, Rich had been on the verge of insanity. Learning that the couple were going to Europe, he went to New York to prevent it, next to California, finally to Dakota, and then returned home. When he heard that Gale and his wife were seen in St. Paul, he arranged to go there and endeavor to bring them back, and finally moving to St. Paul, he went to the hotel where they were staying, and he was seen by various people, to whom he mentioned that he intended to kill them both. He said to John Rowe, a prominent citizen, who tried to dissuade him and who refused to loan him money, since the elopement Rich lost thirty pounds of flesh. About ten years since Dr. Gale came from New York, opening an office, first in West Fulton, then in Waverlyville, and finally moving to Cobleskill. He is a man of fine appearance and pleasing address. He soon had established a fine practice, but by neglect and carelessness, he got himself into disfavor and subjected himself to great doses of severe criticism. His wife, whom he met and married fifteen years ago, when she was Miss Newman, living with her parents at Staten Island, was a most accomplished and refined lady, winning the respect and attachment of the Cobleskill people. They had two children, aged respectively 13 and 14 years. When finally the husband left and the busy tongue of the people began to wag, there was nothing for Mrs. Gale to do but go to her parents, and so she advertised for sale all personal effects of value that had been intended to go to Staten Island. In the meantime John Smith, Mrs. Rich's uncle, was enjoying himself in possession of his niece's property under power of attorney, and Rich himself was trying to solve the problem of the runaway couple's whereabouts. Rich was a nice looking, portly man, very agreeable at first acquaintance, but very disagreeable to those who knew him better. Indeed, it may be said he was often in the extreme. He married Mrs. Trimble June 1, 1860, and it is said that their marriage was not altogether harmonious. Mrs. Rich was a woman of fine appearance, and she was rather comely, although not beautiful, and possessed a nervous temperament. She was rather inclined to be quick and irritable. The remains of Rich's estate, which was valued at $100,000, were sold at auction, and the proceeds were divided between his wife and his children. Mrs. Rich was wealthy and the question as to which of the two died first is anxiously discussed here.

Rich's Political Aspirations.

New York, March 2.—There was a great deal of talk yesterday in the Thirteenth Assembly District concerning the hotel tragedy at St. Paul, Minn., and the Cobleskill people. Rich killed the wife who had deserted him and then committed suicide. Rich formerly lived in New York, and was very well known in the Thirteenth District, where he was a candidate for Assemblyman about ten years ago. At one time he lived on West Twenty-second street, near Eighth avenue, and spent most of his time talking about and doing nothing. His father, who was reputed to be comfortably well off but is not wealthy, was regarded as an indulgent parent who knew his son's constitutional aversion for work. His chief aim seemed to be to get along comfortably with the least possible exertion and keep up appearances of prosperity in the hope of forming a matrimonial alliance. After posing some time as a "lady killer," he finally made the acquaintance of the woman whose life he took on Sunday. She was the daughter of an ex-United States Senator, and after her clandestine marriage to Frank Trimble, was seeking a divorce from him when Rich first met her. Finally she was divorced from her first husband and Rich, who is said to have been of great assistance to her in the proceedings, shortly afterward married her. It was a fortune thing for him, for he was supposed to be in financial straits and the divorced woman had an abundance of money. He held various positions as interpreter, but eventually fell back on his wife for support. Mrs. Rich was a woman of fine appearance, and she was rather comely, although not beautiful, and possessed a nervous temperament. She was rather inclined to be quick and irritable. The remains of Rich's estate, which was valued at $100,000, were sold at auction, and the proceeds were divided between his wife and his children. Mrs. Rich was wealthy and the question as to which of the two died first is anxiously discussed here.

Invested Heavily in Champagne.

and other beverages, and it is reported, was not the least abstemious of the crowd. Night after night he was seen in the saloons, and the men, not to be outdone by this female politician, bought wine quite as generously as she did. It was fun for them after the grating had progressed and Mrs. Rich had become excited by frequent libations. She was in the habit of making impassioned appeals for the support of her husband. A saloon had been made up, and Rich's name was not on it, but it was broken. Mrs. Rich spent her money freely, and did not once lose courage. All this counted for nothing, for although the long-headed politicians and schemers knew Mrs. Rich was busy, they trusted in the strength of the machine. The upshot of it all was that "My Tie," who was nominated for the Thirteenth District, was Republican. Mrs. Rich begged votes and made a house-to-house canvass, but her husband was defeated. A Peacemaker's Reward.

Joseph Meier, a brewer, was out at a party last night and returned homeward about 1:15 this morning. Either the party had been too convivial or the musician's music had been exasperating, for on reaching Meier got into a fight with one of the musicians. The fighter dropped his instrument case and was making the contest lively, when Richard Bieshold, another brewer, tried to stop the fight. He turned on the peacemaker and drove a knife into his head, inflicting a dangerous wound, an inch long and an inch deep. Meier was arrested three hours later.

SAVED HER FORTUNE.

How a Young Girl's Fortune Was Saved from Bad Investment.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

GOSHEN, N. Y., March 2.—A number of gentlemen were talking in this place about the complications that had been brought about by failure of Middletown Bank, the affairs of which, after a year and a half efforts to straighten out, are still in an entangled condition. The conversation led to the relation of the following story of singular accidents that had interfered to save the little fortune of an orphan girl whose money was to have been invested in Middletown Bank shares.

The money was a trust in the hands of an uncle of the girl. It had previously been invested in bonds and a mortgage which had matured and been paid. The girl was about to be married and she wanted in some good security. The Middletown Bank stock was then held at 110 a share and was the favorite investment in that part of the country. The trustee of the girl's money wrote to a friend, who lived near Middletown, and asked him if he could secure $4,000 worth of stock in the Middletown Bank. The friend replied that he thought he was able to do so. Just at that time several estates which held stocks were selling in order to settle up their affairs. The girl's uncle prepared a certified check for $4,000 and inclosed it in a letter addressed to his friend. He had to ride two miles to the village Post-office, and when he arrived there it was close for the night. He put his hand in his pocket, took out the letter, as he supposed, and dropped it in the mail-box and drove home. He waited a week without hearing from his friend. He wrote a second time, inquiring as to the success which the friend had met in getting the bank shares, and, as a matter of form, asked if the certified check had been received all right. A letter from Middletown by return mail assured the trustee that no such check had come to hand. He went to his Post-office and made inquiry of the Postmaster about the letter, the amount of business done at the office making it an easy matter for the Postmaster to remember what mail had passed through his hands during at least a month's time. He said he had not seen any letter addressed to the Middletown gentleman for he knew him well and would have remembered it. The writer of the missing letter gave the Postmaster the day, date and hour when the letter had been placed in the Post-office. "Oh," said the Postmaster, "then I'll bet that the blank envelope containing a circular was the letter you dropped in the office. I found one in the box the morning after the night you mailed your letter." The Postmaster found the blank envelope and circular. The writer of the letter recognized it as one that on Broadway, New York, one day while he was in the city. He then concluded that he must have dropped the letter containing the check on his way from home to the Post-office the night he supposed he had mailed it and in the darkness had placed the blank envelope in the mail box. He hurried home, and looking in the buggy he had used that night found the missing letter in the boot with the check safe. He placed the letter in an inner pocket of his coat and went about doing up his chores at the barn and the house. He intended to write a second letter and mail it that eve, but when he was at work a number of friends drove up, and he spent the remainder of the day at the farm, and he went to the house with him. Before they arrived he had taken off his coat and hung it up in the closet. When he went to the Post-office the next morning he got it for the time. He did not get to the village that evening, and the first thing the next morning, he wrote the second letter to his friend. He went to the wagon-house to get the certified check out of the letter in his coat pocket, and was startled to discover that the coat had disappeared from where he had hung it. A thorough search failed to reveal where it was, and none of the family had seen it. The conclusion that the coat had been stolen by a tramp was arrived at. Neither coat nor check were ever seen again. Payment on the check was stopped, and in the course of two weeks the trustee of the fund started for Middletown to deliver the check to his friend in person. On his way to the station he was taken suddenly ill. He was obliged to return home and was unable to transact any business for over a week. As soon as he could get around again he put the check in his pocket, and went to Middletown to pay for the bank stock. He went directly to the bank and found an excited crowd in the vicinity. The news that he heard made him faint. The bank in whose stock he was about to invest his niece's little fortune had closed its doors and was hopelessly bankrupt. He went back home thoroughly convinced that for some reason or other Providence had interfered with his intention on behalf of his ward.

HANDLED HIM BY A BOY

THE FRITZ TRAGEDY.

The World's Disclosures Create Much Excitement at New Haven.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., March 2.—The disclosures made in yesterday's WORLD as to the manner of the death of Emil Fritz, the Ansonia watchman, who was supposed to have committed suicide at his home February 19, have created much excitement here. Coroner Mix was asked yesterday afternoon if the Post-Dispatch correspondent if he should reopen the case. He had not seen the WORLD's disclosures and was much surprised when he learned that there was any suspicion of murder in the case. He at once telephoned to Dr. Geo. L. Beardsley, the medical examiner in Ansonia, and asked him how much truth there was in the WORLD's story. The doctor replied that the WORLD's story was incorrect, but that he would communicate further with the Coroner. He added that he saw no reason to change his original opinion that the case was one of suicide.

"This case," said Coroner Mix, "was reported to me on February 19, by Dr. Beardsley, as a case of suicide. Dr. Beardsley is a competent and painstaking medical examiner, and I am certain he made a thorough investigation."

"Should he not have taken charge of the pistol and bullet?"

"He certainly should have done so; that was his duty."

"Have you concluded not to reopen the case?"

"That would depend upon what the medical examiners report to me. I will see how much truth there is in the WORLD's story and make up my mind afterwards. Now," continued the Coroner, "supposing all the statements made in the WORLD to be true, what is there contained in them that would lead me to suppose that the death of Fritz was caused by a person other than himself? There are simply two statements bearing on the murder theory. The first is that two bullets have been found, one of which is unaccounted for; and the second that he quarreled with his wife. On the other hand, I have the report of two physicians who examined his body after death for marks of violence, and who report one bullet wound. If there were two bullets fired into Fritz's body there would have been two wounds."

MONEY FOR FARNELL.

Last Night's Meeting of the Parliamentary Association in New York.

NEW YORK, March 2.—The vast public meeting of the Hoffman House Parliamentary Association was held last night. The Executive Committee will hereafter have charge of the closing up of the fund, which now has a grand total of $1,438.28. The expenses have been $1,142.50, or less than 80 per cent. Warm words of thanks to all, and of encouragement to Farnell were spoken.

GARLAND TRYING TO SAVE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL MONTGOMERY.

The President's Message to the Senate—Comment by Republican Senators—The Signal Service Expenditures—Investigation—Tombing Cabinet Members—The Hurd-Romels Contest—Congressional Proceedings—Washington News.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—It has leaked out that Zach Montgomery, Attorney-General for the Interior Department, was rejected by the Senate nearly a week ago. The Attorney-General did not learn of his rejection until it was too late to make any attempt to get a reconsideration. By making personal appeals to the Judiciary Committee, of which he used to be a member, he succeeded in getting a reconsideration, and a recommendation to the committee. Montgomery was appointed to the position by the President.

The President's Message.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch. WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—The act of the President in sending to the Senate a message bearing upon a matter still in controversy is viewed by many of the Republican Senators as audacious, but shrewd. The President, they say, has violated the ethics of the Senate, but will doubtless make up for himself an amount of public sympathy which will more than atone for the condemnation he will meet.

The Signal Service Investigation.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—The House Committee on Expenditures in the War Department yesterday resumed the examination into the accounts of the Signal Service. Controversy may be the only word which can be used to describe the proceedings. It produced a number of vouchers in which it is claimed there are irregularities. Some of them were for materials purchased in large amounts by the Signal Service for military telegraph lines in regard to which the law and the regulations requiring advertisements for proposals were disregarded. Among these materials were from telegraph poles costing $1 a piece, which were furnished by a Washington firm and were delivered in Washington. In regard to the Signal Service Expedition, for which Mr. Maynard could find no authority at all, there was a voucher of $4,000 for the use of a schooner. Several vouchers for the monthly pay of a cook; one for a barrel of whiskey, and one for a barrel of apples, were also presented. Mr. Maynard stated that if there was any authority for the expenditure for the transportation and supplies should have been furnished to fill the bill. The Quartermaster's Department. There was no authority for the employment of a cook. The investigation will be continued next Friday, when Mr. Maynard will produce the vouchers regarding the Signal Service. Signal service has not, thus far, been reported at any of the meetings of the committee.

Tombing Cabinet Members.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch. WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—Some time since it became known that Secretary Manning and Secretary Whitney had threatened to resign if Attorney-General Garland was allowed to remain in the Cabinet. Since some of the new York papers have taken up the case of Mr. Whitney's alleged connection with the Broadway railroad, and the friends of Mr. Garland are industriously circulating the report that Mr. Garland has told the President he will not remain in the Cabinet with Mr. Whitney. Of course, this is a joke. Mr. Garland is not going to resign. He is compelled. The friends of Mr. Garland and the enemies of Mr. Whitney, however, are taking advantage of the situation.

Hurd vs. Romels.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—The House Committee on Elections will on Thursday take a final vote on the contested election case of Hurd vs. Romels, Tenth Ohio District.

Personal and Political.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch. WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—Capt. Eads telegraphed from New York that he has not been on the floor of the House this session. Representative Randall, who has been quite sick, is recovering. It is understood that the Postmaster-General has requested the resignation of Third Assistant Postmaster-General H. H. Hurd. Mr. Hurd, Chief Clerk of the Department, will be selected to fill the vacancy thus created. The Senate, in executive session yesterday, confirmed a number of nominations, to which there were no objections. The Senate also confirmed the Democratic defense of the Union.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—Among the petitions presented in the Senate today was one by Mr. Hoar from workmen employed in Government workshops since the eight-hour law of 1868 was passed, praying compensation for overtime, or reference to a committee. The petition was signed by 50,000 men it could be blocked by the enemy or by one's own men, if bribed, in the course of the afternoon watch. He said that in case of war, the Government would be unable to block the canal himself, though he might be court-martialed. He favored the use of England's old highway around the Cape.
